

ABSTRACT

A wireless conferencing system for interactive rich media communication includes one or more transceivers that acquire, transmit, receive and display audio and video data using a wireless information exchange protocol. Optionally, a central server processes, coordinates and manages the wireless information exchanged among multiple transceivers. Software components provide rich media conferencing utility for a variety of uses, including judicial, law enforcement, medical, and military applications.